Castle of Vozmediano

The castle seems quite old and three different construction stages are visible in its walls. This is a double enclosure structure built on big rocks. The outide wall is thick and solid. The top has medieval-looking battlements.

The large tower of homage preserves the outside access gate and the one leading to the courtyard. There used to be different floors. Today, only the arches remain. Vozmediano was an independent village until the kingdom of Fernando IV, when it becomes part of Agreda. The castle was linked to the house of the Marquis of Santillana, who served as a frontier man in Somontano for the kings of Aragón.
