COME to Castilla y León

The vast, and highly diverse, region of Castilla y León is an exceptional location for bird watching in the Iberian Peninsula. From the vast plains of the interior to its high mountain peaks, a multitude of different habitats can be found with a rich and varied birdlife. Around 361 species of birds have been recorded and of the 266 species that nest in Spain, 218 can be found in this region. Amongst the main species remarkable for their breeding populations (when placed in a national and European context) are: the White Stork, Black Stork, Red Kite, Egyptian Vulture, Griffon Vulture, Black Vulture, Spanish Imperial Eagle, Hen Harrier, Montagu's Harrier, Lesser Kestrel, Peregrine Falcon, Great Bustard, Cantabrian Capercaillie, Middle Spotted Woodpecker, Dupont's Lark, Bluethroat and Rook.

Castilla y León is the Spanish region with the greatest representation in the European ecological network Natura 2000 Network, with 18.94% of the total. Within this framework, a network of Special Protection Areas for birds (SPA) was established which provides protection for the habitats of the majority of the most threatened bird populations of the European Union. Seventy SPAs have been declared, covering an area of around two million hectares, over 21% of the regional surface area.

Main habitats and species

Arable land provides a favourable habitat for numerous species of steppe birds. The Great Bustard is the most representative, with one of the most important populations in the world. About 10,000 of them can be found spread around the cereal plains of the region, mainly in the Tierra de Campos, Tierra del Pan, Tierra de Medina and La Moraña areas. In these wide-open spaces low-flying Montagu's Harriers can often be seen, as well as flocks of Little Bustards and Black-bellied Sandgrouse scattered among the crops.

The Cantabrian Mountains provide the southern border for the distribution area of some European birds. In the deciduous forests of the Picos de Europa (Leon) lives the Cantabrian Capercaillie, a glacial relict increasingly threatened with extinction. The beech and oak forests of these mountains also provide a habitat for woodpeckers such as the Black Woodpecker and Middle Spotted Woodpecker and other small birds such as the Eurasian Treecreeper.

The steppe lagoons are of vital importance to the migration of aquatic birds from all over Europe. The Natural Reserve at the Villafáfila Lagoons (Zamora) and the lagoon at La Nava (Palencia) are the main wetlands in the region with more than 50,000 wintering aquatic birds, 30,000 of which are Graylag geese.

The river canyons provide the main breeding sites for many species of rupicolous birds. The Natural Park of Arribes del Duero (Salamanca-Zamora) is one of the leading examples of this type of environment with very important breeding populations of Black Stork, Griffon Vulture, Egyptian Vulture and Golden Eagle. The park hosts the main reproductive concentration of the Bonelli Eagle, the most endangered species in the region. The canyons and cliffs of the SPAs of the Hoces del Alto Ebro and Rudron and Humada-Peña Amaya (Burgos) also protect important birds of prey populations including the Griffon Vulture, Egyptian Vulture, Peregrine Falcon and Eagle Owl. The towns and villages of Castilla y León are home to bird populations of significant interest. The White Stork is the most popular and well known with more than 8,000 pairs. Other species of note include the Lesser Kestrel with more than three thousand pairs nesting on the roofs of buildings in most of the villages of the region.

Spanish imperial eagle

The moorlands conserve large areas of largely unproductive wasteland and stony ground where the established vegetation consists of small shrubs. The SPAs of Altos de Barahona and Paramos de Layna (Soria), are home to important populations of Dupont's Lark, one of the rarest of all Spanish birds.

Black-winged stilt

The riverine forests that run alongside the river network of the Duero basin provide an environment for a rich diversity and large number of birds. The Natural Reserve of the Riberas de Castonuño-Vega del Duero (Valladolid) and the riverbanks of the Duero at Burgos have well-preserved stretches of thicket and vast areas of reed beds where herons nest, including the Purple Heron, the Grey Heron and the Marsh Harrier.

All these natural treasures that have made their home in our region can also be yours for a while just by coming to visit our natural environments, meeting local people and sharing our biodiversity. We have preserved this natural heritage so you too can get to know it and help us to broadcast the importance of our countryside.

• Come to Castilla y León DISCOVER its birdlife

In the vast geographic area that makes up the region of Castilla y León, a huge variety of bird-friendly habitats can be found. From the vast plains of the interior to the mountains that surround them, a wide variety of different habitats can be found with communities of birds characteristic of each area. The birds that can be found include typically Euro-Siberian species (such as the Cantabrian Capercaillie), exclusively Mediterranean birds (like the Spanish Imperial Eagle in the southern area of the Sistema Central) and steppe birds such as the Great Bustard that inhabit the deforested interior of the plains.

Castilla y León is the Spanish autonomous region with the greatest representation in the European ecological network Natura 2000 Network, with 21% of its total surface area under protection.

Roller

Knowing where to search for each different species, as well as which can be found at any given time in the different ecosystems of the region, is undoubtedly one of the best ways of helping ornithological enthusiasts when they are starting out.

In the following pages details are given of the distribution of 20 species of birds within Castilla y León, of interest to the ornithological enthusiast either for their beauty or their rarity in a European context.

We would like to invite all nature lovers to come and enjoy the beauty and biodiversity that is still in existence in the extensive Castilla y León region.

20 Birds all within reach in Castilla y León

• Black Stork Ciconia nigra

Distributed around the southern fringes of the region and regularly breeding in the provinces of Avila, Salamanca, Segovia and Zamora. Numerically, Castilla y León has the second most important population in Spain.

Population trend

Increasing

Distribution in Castilla y León

• White Stork Ciconia ciconia

Widely distributed throughout the region from the arable land of the interior to the mountainous areas. Breeds in all provinces with the largest breeding concentrations in Leon, Salamanca, Segovia and Zamora. Gathers in large concentrations in the days prior to migration.

Population trend

Increasing

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Egyptian Vulture Neophron pectoratus

Found mainly in the Cordillera Cantábrica, Arribes del Duero and the Sistema Ibérico and their foothills. Not found in the arable land of the interior where there is a lack of suitable nesting sites. Breeds regularly in all provinces except Valladolid. Worthy of special mention is the population in Burgos and the populations concentrated around the river canyons of the Arribes del Duero in Zamora and Salamanca.

Population trend

Declining

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Griffon Vulture Gyps fulvus

Distributed around the mountainous areas and river canyons, mainly in the eastern and southeastern parts of the region. Breeding is rare in the Sistema Central and non-existent in the cereal growing areas of the interior and mountainous areas of the northwest. Breeds in all the provinces of Castilla y León.

Population trend

Increasing

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Greylag Goose Anser anser

Average wintering population of 30,000 birds. The Villafáfila lagoons, the second most important site in Spain after the Marismas del Guadalquivir, are the main location for this species with an average of 24,843 birds. Other sites of interest are the lagoons at La Nava and Boada in Palencia, the Rosarito reservoir and the El Oso lagoon in Avila, the Ricobayo reservoir in Zamora and the Ebro reservoir in Burgos.

Population trend

Increasing

• Red kite Milvus milvus

Widely distributed although it seems to avoid areas to the northwest and the deforested arable land in the interior of the region. Breeds in all provinces with the main breeding concentrations in the pasture lands around Salamanca and Zamora and on the north face of the Sistema Central, where the highest numbers can be found. The breeding population is estimated at 1,000 pairs.

Population trend

Declining

• Black Vulture Aegypius monachus

Breeding colonies are restricted to the Sistema Central. They breed in the provinces of Avila, Salamanca and Segovia with the main populations concentrated around the Sierra de Guadarama, the eastern Macizo of Gredos and the Sierra de Francia.

Population trend

Increasing

• Montagu's Harrier Circus pygargus

Widely distributed throughout the region, preferring open and deforested spaces in the arable land and moorland of the Duero basin. More dispersed and scarce elsewhere, especially in large mountainous areas. Breeds in all provinces with the biggest populations concentrated in the cereal growing areas of the interior such as Tierra de Campos and La Moraña.

Population trend

Stable

• Golden Eagle Aguila chrysaetos

Distribution appears to depend on the existence of cliffs so are mainly found in mountain ranges and most of the river canyons in the region. It avoids the deforested areas of the interior.

Population trend  Increasing

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Lesser Kestrel Falco naumanni

Summer nesting and common migrant. Widely distributed throughout the interior of the region, mainly in the arable land to the north and south of the Duero and also in the high moorlands and foothills of the Sistema Central. Breeds in all provinces with the largest populations in Zamora, Salamanca, Valladolid and Palencia.

Population trend  Increasing

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Great Bustard Otis tarda

Wide distribution in the arable land to the north and south of the Duero, with the largest populations concentrated around the Tierra de Campos, La Moraña (AV), Campo de Peñaranda (SA) and Tierra de Medina (VA) areas. Castilla y León is home to the largest population in Spain, with an estimated 10,000 birds.

Population trend  Stable

Distribution in Castilla y León

• European Bee-Eater Merops apiaster

Widely distributed throughout the region although less numerous in the Cordillera Cantábrica and missing in some parts of the Sistema Ibérico. Breeds in all provinces with very high numbers for Spain in the olive groves of the Sierra de Gredos (AV) as well as high numbers in Salamanca, Zamora and the south of Burgos.

Population trend  Stable

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Common Crane Grus grus

Distributed in the Tierra de Campos area (PA-ZA), Tierra de Medina-La Moraña (VA-AV) and Tiétar valley (AV) with an average of 2,300 birds in the winter censuses. Apparently during the last century it used to breed in the La Nava lagoon (PA).

Population trend  Stable

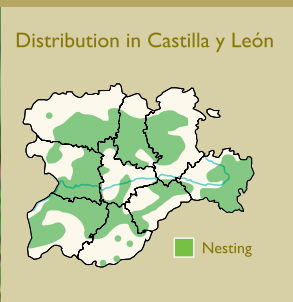

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Little Bustard Tetrax tetrax

Wide distribution in the open and deforested spaces in the cereal growing arable land of the interior as well as the moorlands and foothills of the Montes de Leon. Breeds in all provinces with the greatest numbers in Leon, Zamora and Salamanca. In recent years the Iberian populations, as well as those located in the rest of Europe, show a declining trend.

Population trend  Declining

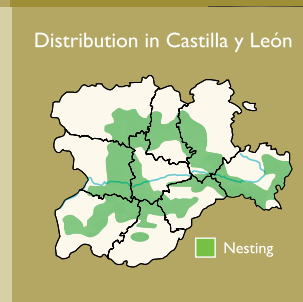

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Black-Bellied Sandgrouse Pterocles orientalis

Considered to be rather sedentary, its transient behaviour is little known. Wide distribution on arable land and moorland. Breeds in all provinces with the largest populations concentrated in the cereal growing areas to the south of the Duero, mainly in Avila, Salamanca, Valladolid and Soria.

Population trend  Stable

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Dupont's Lark Chersophilus duponti

Found in two distinct concentrations separate from each other. The first, and most important, is in the moorlands in the northeast of the region and the second in various locations in the west of Zamora. Breeding is confirmed in the provinces of Burgos, Palencia, Segovia, Soria and Zamora and also possibly in Avila, Valladolid and Salamanca. The Castile-Leon population is the largest in Spain.

Population trend  Declining

Distribution in Castilla y León

20 Birds all within reach in Castilla y León

• Alpine Accentor Prunella collaris

The breeding population is found in the highest altitudes of the Castilla y León mountain ranges: Sierra de Gredos (AV), Cordillera Cantábrica (LE-PA), Montes de Leon (LE), La Montaña and Sierra de Neila (BU), Sierra del Guadarrama (SG) and Picos de Urbión (SO) at an altitude of between 900 and 2,500 metres. In winter it is more widely distributed and numerous, appearing in limestone crags of medium altitude.

Population trend  Stable

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Golden Oriole Oriolus oriolus

Abundant and widely distributed around Castilla y León. Strong breeding in all provinces although more scarce in the driest and most deforested areas in the centre of the region as well as the mountainous areas. The highest numbers are found in the northeast of Zamora and southwest of Burgos. It is a typical inhabitant of riverside woodlands.

Population trend  Increasing

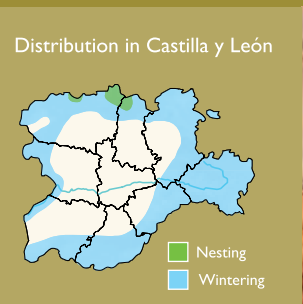

Distribution in Castilla y León

• Wallcreeper Tichodroma muraria

The nesting population is found in Leon and Palencia. In Castilla y León the greatest numbers can be found in the Picos de Europa (LE), especially in the Macizo Central. The average altitude in the breeding season is 1,680 metres in the Cordillera Cantábrica. During migration and wintering it can be found at altitudes of less than 800 metres.

Population trend  Stable

• Azure-Winged Magpie Cyanopica cyana

Wide distribution around the southern part of the region, reaching its northernmost limit at the river Arlanza and Lara area of Burgos without going beyond the Sistema Ibérico and taking the river Duero as its north-eastern boundary. Breeds in all the provinces except Leon with reduced concentrations in the southwest of Palencia.

The TRINO Project

Rural Domestic Tourism and Ornithology

The TRINO Project (Rural Domestic Tourism and Ornithology) was a proposal made by thirty Local Action Groups of the LEADERCAL programme under Axis 4 of the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development (EAFRD) in Castilla y León (Spain). Its main objective is the promotion of ornithological tourism in Castilla y León.

This project works to ensure that rural tourism accommodation providers supply an offer that is compatible both with the needs of ornithological tourism and nature by using sustainability criteria and making a commitment to follow good environmental practices. Other established objectives to ensure the region reaches a higher level of environmental awareness include environmental education for children and young people, increasing awareness among foresters, arable and cattle farmers and also training guides.

Other activities that will ensure you do not leave the region disappointed include conservation activities with protected species and the creation of routes that respect both wildlife and their natural habitats that can be taken by bicycle, on a horse or in a horse-drawn carriage (depending on the species to be observed).

RELAX in our accommodation

Thirty Local Action Groups of the LEADERCAL programme under Axis 4 of the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development (EAFRD) in Castilla y León are working as part of the TRINO project (Rural Domestic Tourism and Ornithology) to ensure that rural tourism accommodation providers supply an offer that is compatible both with the needs of ornithological tourism and nature by using sustainability criteria and making a commitment to follow good environmental practices.

The rural accommodation establishments linked to TRINO are committed to the development of a series of activities with the aim of offering a quality service adapted to the requirements of nature tourism. With this in mind ornithological training has been provided to increase knowledge of local birdlife and raise awareness of the needs of the birdwatcher.

In these establishments information is available about the birdlife in each area. In addition the implementation of good environmental practices in these establishments ensures tourism activity is compatible with sustainable development.

Practice responsible AND SUSTAINABLE TOURISM

This kind of tourism is based on criteria that have the socio-economic development of the area as their ultimate objective, rather than mass tourism. This avoids any negative environmental impact on the area to be visited, respecting and benefitting the local population, their economy and the environment.

Through responsible tourism we try to guarantee:

- An approach to local culture and the environment that encourages the participation of local people in tourism.
- The negative effects of tourist activities are kept to a minimum.
- An increase in the positive effects of tourist activities. By these means local people will gain some economic, social, educational and environmental benefits.

Some recommendations to take into account during your visit:

- Have respect for current regulations, paying special attention to the protected natural spaces.
- Wherever possible, visit information or nature interpretation centres. There you will find useful information about how to organise and enjoy your visit as well as gaining awareness of environmental values, access to routes and trails, authorised use etc.
- Avoid any activities that might cause a fire.
- Do not leave any waste or rubbish behind. Leave everything in the same state as you found it.
- A pair of binoculars, some field guides and appropriate clothing will make your field trip more interesting and comfortable.
- When taking routes or trails, try to ensure any human impact is kept to a minimum.
- Respect local culture and traditions.
- Buy local products, it will support the economy of the area.
- Hire local guides so that you can gain a deeper knowledge of the area.

¿WHY Castilla y León?

Guadarrama National Park

Boada Lagoon

Arribes del Duero Nature Reserve

Its natural heritage is one of the hallmarks of Castilla y León. Its diverse landscapes, extending over more than 94,000 km², are home to some of the highest biodiversity rates in Europe. The presence of 360 species of vertebrates is a good indicator for an area with around 26% of its natural area under protection, ensuring its long-term conservation.

Castilla y León is a leader in rural tourism in Spain and a benchmark for the sector. This prominent position allows new tourism offers to be embarked upon that satisfy the interests of those who visit our rural environment. It is in this way that this ornithological tourism project has developed, enabling the visitor to get close to the region's birdlife, natural landscapes and other species of wildlife.

You can enjoy bird watching activities in complete peace and comfort, as there are many hides and other types of infrastructure in place for this purpose.
