

Hermitage of San Facundo

Currently, the central apse of the original temple and the belfry, which serves as wall to close the place of the presbytery, are only retained. It was probably the only thing that was built in origin, although the project had to be much more ambitious, at least with a nave according to the regional type but which could never build. The belfry, which is originally from the hermitage, was built over an arch of triumph of access to the apse.
