

The Festival of Santa Águeda

Is a festival celebrated by the women of the town, when the town becomes theirs for the day.

The festival originates in the year 1227, when the Moors occupied the Alcázar (the fortress) of Segovia. The women of Zamarramala entertained the Moors with dancing while the men reconquered the fortress. Ever since then the feast has been celebrated in the town and the procession becomes more of a parade, with dancing and music, which become even livelier when the women go out of the entrance to the village and dance under the sight of the Alcázar.
