

Archeological sites of Ambrona and Torralba

The sites of Ambrona and Torralba are the most relevant of the Lower Palaeolithic in the Iberian Peninsula.

The excavations discovered remains of an abundant mammals fauna (bulls, horses and others), standing out a type of elephant of straight ivories (elephas antiquus) of 300.000 years ago whose fossils are shown in the Ambrona's Museum.

The groups of humans who lived in these lands were semi-nomadic and lived in caves or outside. Their life was based on hunting animals and the harvest of wild products.

Archaeological Hall

Archaeological Hall of Medinaceli

Natural-sized and model reconstructions of public and private atmospheres characteristic of the pre-historic and historic past of medinaceli and its area.

Archeological sites of Ambrona and Torralba

The access stairs to the hall recreate a time tunnel that brings together the most significant aspects of the Palaeolithic and Neolithic groups that lived in the Ambrona Valley. It ends with the Jalón Valley settlements from the Bronze Age and the 2nd Iron Age.
