

Church of Santa Maria Magdalena

Gothic-Renaissance building of the XVI century, built with stone and brick, following the design of Rodrigo Gil de Hontañón. It has a Latin cross floor, with a nave with five sections, rectangular apse and marked transept in floor.

the church was founded by Don Pedro de Lagasca, right-hand man of Charles V. It stands on the remains of a chapel which had been built around 1158, on the arch of a door to access to Valladolid and is known as María de Molina's arch. Rodrigo Gil de Hontañón designed the building and Francisco River continued .
