

Parish Church of Galleguillos

Small mudejar-romanesque church dating from the 12th century, with a central nave and a side aisle communicated via raised round arches with triple archivolts. The interior apse is well preserved and is very similar to the one in the Iglesia de Santiago in Alba de Tormes. On the outside, only the base and the wall, with six double arches, have been preserved.

It features a central nave and only one side aisle, when the usual is two. It is believed the construction was stopped due to budget problems or because of a change in the prevailing mentality of the time.
