

Church of San Leonardo

Researches state this church was built as far back as the early 12th century, although it had its heyday in the 13th, when the atrium, which today looks like a narrow side chapel, was added.

The church is too long for its width, due to successive alterations and reforms. Today's apse end was erected in the 16th century. The polygonal apse is covered by a groin vault. The apse leads to a 16th-century burial chapel covered by an arris vault.
