

Parish Church of Cabezas del Villar

This 16th-century granite ashlar church has a single nave with a polygonal apse end and a tower. The nave must have been covered by a wooden ceiling.

The tower has three bodies, the bottom ones have no windows, the upper one holds the bells. The lower body of the tower houses the baptism chapel, covered by a ribbed vault. Access to the church was via a large round arch, today unused and the southern access was via a basket-handle arch dating from the 16th century.
