

Church of Santo Tomas de Canterbury

It has a late XVI century style and was built with blocks of stone of different sizes. It was started with a small chapel with two sections designed by Rodrigo Gil de Hontañón, and was widened the main nave with two sections attached to the ancients about 1570 by the architect Juan del Camino. It consists of two buildings, one of them larger and with four sections separated by arches and roof with starry vaults with warps and tiercerons.
